

Hannah Lumby

Hannah Lumby is a UK parent of two daughters. Her area of interest is the emotional experience of parents during early hearing screening and intervention. Hannah is passionate about the value of peer support and connecting new parents to the local community of other supportive parents. She is also interested in exploring how the experience of parenting a deaf child can foster connections between parents across the globe. Hannah holds a degree in Psychology and works for the National Deaf Children's Society where she has developed a parent-to-parent support program. Her current role involves providing advice and guidance to families on a range of topics.
